Auditor opening

Special election for auditor vacancy depends who is appointed, party chairs say

By Christopher Braunschweig
Newton Daily News

The board of supervisors want to fill the county auditor vacancy by appointment, but the chairpersons from both major parties may lean toward a special election.

Of course they say that all depends on who is eventually appointed to head the office for the two years left in Jasper County Auditor Dennis Parrott's term — which ends in 2024 — and whether enough signatures are acquired to call a special election. A successful petition would need about 1,500-1,600 signatures.

Michelle Smith, chair of the Jasper County Democratic Party, said it is ultimately up to the citizens to decide whether they agree with the supervisors' choice. Smith is not opposed to a special election. She knows it will cost money to hold a special election, but the people do have a say in who fills an elected position.

"Dennis was elected and now he's retiring, so people should also have the option to elect if that's what they want," Smith said.

Jasper County Supervisor Brandon Talsma said it would cost upwards of

Contemplating the campaigns

Jasper County candidates think back on their work on Election Day

By Christopher Braunschweig
Newton Daily News

Editor's note: The following article is a collection of interviews Newton News conducted with Jasper County candidates throughout Election Day. The goal was to meet with candidates as they go about their day and get a sense of how they feel about their campaigns, their efforts and their concerns before results posted.

3:06 p.m. — Denny Carpenter spends Election Day rehabilitating at Newton Village

Denny Carpenter sits in a recliner listening to the radio with his eyes barely open. The view from his window at Newton Village lets him see trains pass by, but the blinds are drawn. The lights are turned off. He might have been trying to rest when I knocked at his door.

His white hair is combed and he looks relaxed in his plaid shirt and blue jeans, which seem almost too big for him. Around his neck is a fall detection pendant. He sits upright in his chair when I meet with him. Carpenter says he's doing well, his walking is improving and that he's gaining weight every week.

"I want to start walking a little bit by myself but I'm not quite brave enough yet," he says, noting he still requires a walker.

For the past month or so, Carpenter has been recovering from a fall in his home. He says he got up at 2:30 a.m. and tripped. Carpenter was on the floor and couldn't pick himself up. The 82-year-old supervisor didn't receive help until 3:30 p.m. The chair of the Jasper County Republican Party checked in and found him.

More than 12 hours on the floor.
